

Warm feet and a cool monthly bill thanks to spray foam floor insulation by Canberra Insulation Specialists

High moisture content and unwanted air flow under your house can be problematic. Polyurethane spray foam insulation offers the solution for sub floor and crawl spaces.

When a Canberra homeowner first decided to introduce modern energy efficiencies into her family home, she contacted Alexander Watson for expert advice.

Jeremy Watson from Alexander Watson verified where the most energy was being lost through an energy assessment audit and worked closely with the home-owner to develop an energy plan which would remediate all of the issues she was facing.

Two detailed views of the Polyurethane spray foam application proudly supplied by Pacific Urethanes.

The outcome was to install floor insulation by applying Pacific Urethanes closed cell spray, UrePac Rigid R3 34FR polyurethane to the underside of her floorboards.

As much as 40% of a building's energy is lost due to air infiltration. Gaps, penetrations and air leaks—which can all be prevented—may result in energy bills being unnecessarily high and allow valuable resources to go to waste.

Spray foam can act as an insulant, an air sealant or an air barrier, so closing those nooks and crannies which allows warm air to escape adds dollars to monthly energy bills.

It did not take long to feel the difference polyurethane spray foam floor insulation was making to her family's home. The result is improved livability and we are confident lower energy costs.
